UN VOLUNTEERS
State of the World's Volunteerism Report 2018
Policy Brief # 1 / December 2017

VOLUNTARY MAPPING AND MONITORING FOR TRANSFORMATIVE, LOCALLY-OWNED CLIMATE ACTION

POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS

For UN Member States

- Invest in opportunities for volunteers, particularly youth, to get involved in climate mapping and monitoring to promote awareness, skills, and sustainable behaviour as part of a cost-effective, all-of-society approach.
- Ensure that volunteering for climate action is inclusive with the training and equipment required to produce reliable data.
- Develop an enabling environment of laws, policies, and norms to protect volunteers and empower them to fully contribute to climate action.

For UN Agencies

- Support multi-stakeholder efforts to develop and coordinate effective systems for collection, analysis, and dissemination of volunteer-collected climate data.
- Create platforms for volunteer groups, particularly from the Global South, to share innovative approaches to mapping and monitoring climate-related risk.

As our climate changes rapidly, it brings major new risks for communities. Across all societies, volunteers are at the forefront of responding to and coping with shocks, using local knowledge, networks, and capacities to build community resilience. But the scale and unpredictability of future risks, rising inequalities, and low capacities mean that new support is required to sustain this people-centred approach to climate resilience.

As part of the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme's 2018 State of the World's Volunteerism project (SWVR 2018), this brief focuses on one way in which volunteers contribute to climate action – mapping and monitoring environmental risks. It discusses how volunteering can, with the right support, drive efforts to promote locally-owned resilience building and climate action as part of an all-of-society approach.

Participatory, cost-effective means of implementation

The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development acknowledges volunteerism as an important means of implementation. The Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and the Paris Agreement both recognize that participatory approaches to
